CRA Social Media March 2022

What started as an effort to meet his neighbors and investigate the diversity of his wonderfully mixed neighborhood, has now turned into an exhibit at the Arts Warehouse, unlike any other body of work that has been shown before.

"I began painting portraits during the early stages of the COVID pandemic. The acrylic sketches progressed from those of people in my immediate household to individuals I slowly came into contact with as my sphere of meetings expanded," said Neal Hanowitz, who recently relocated to Delray. "The earliest pieces were portraits of family and neighbors, then delivery persons, infrastructure improvement workers, lifeguards (once the public pool opened), and finally to people randomly met while shopping or doing daily chores."
